

Little Rainbow Riding Hood

By Alessia B.

Once upon a time, in a magical fairy tale land, an annoyance was brewing. A family lived in a village with houses made of stone with thatched roofs, candle lit cobblestone roads, and used horse –drawn wagons to get around. A mother and father were trying to decide what to do their bothersome daughter, Little Rainbow Riding Hood.

“If we tell her to go into the woods maybe she will get eaten,” said the mother to the father.

“I think we should make her go into the woods and get eaten too,” said the father to the mother. Now, if you are wondering how parents could be so cruel, the sad truth is Rainbow Hood drove them so insane they wanted to destroy her. Rainbow Hood walked inside the parents’ room.

“Where’s the new iPhone you said you wouldn’t get me?” Rainbow asked angrily.

“Oh it’s never coming dear,” Said the mother. Rainbow Hood had a babyish temper tantrum. While Rainbow Hood was crying the mother and father walked into the bathroom.

“I think it’s time for our plan,” said the father. The mother nodded in agreement.

“Yes, it is time.”

Later, the mother walked up to Rainbow Hood and said, “Dear, I have a quest for you. Go into the woods and give some bread to your sick Granny. If you do this, and come back alive, I will give you the iPhone you have been begging us for.” Now Rainbow Hood was so excited to get an iPhone, she was eager to get on with her quest and take bread to her Granny, who she never knew about.

Rainbow Hood was walking through the pitch black forest, wondering to herself why she was going to see her sick Granny to give her bread, who she suspiciously never knew!

She was wondering why she had no map. She just let it go and kept trudging onward for hours. Or shall I say, taking two steps at a time and then resting for a minute. After 12 steps, Rainbow Hood got hungry. She ate all the bread and realized, “There’s no bread for my Granny!” Rainbow Hood screamed and had another wild and crazy temper tantrum. While Rainbow Hood was busy whining, a hungry wolf was in the woods quietly stalking her.

This sneaky wolf was the most vicious thing since the 1980s. It had the largest ears that made people scream. Rainbow Hood kept walking in a heavy footed manner. She strolled into a clearing covered in fallen leaves and looked up. She wasn’t startled by the vicious wolf because she thought it was a bunny. Rainbow Hood waved. The wolf growled.

“Wait...my parents sent me here to earn an iPhone that they would not give me before!” she said. “Mr. Bunny, I bet you have it.” The wolf just thought how naïve she was and how easy it would be to catch her. Then he pounced. Rainbow Hood frightfully screamed one last time and was never heard from again. Her tale was told in fairy tales and they changed her name to Little Red Riding Hood.

The lesson to be learned is to never drive your parents insane, know your animals, and never scream in the woods.